HOMEMAKERS' NEWS

Wallpaper has made a comeback as a decorating aid.

It is pointed out that great improvements have been made in both design and process of wallpaper manufacture. The present market furnishes an enormous variety of papers, resulting in their wider use and a better understanding of their proper selection for particular purposes.

Wallpapers are manufactured in various widths, but are sold in bolts or sticks which may contain 2, 3, or 4 rolls. A roll is actually 36 square feet, but 30 square feet is used when estimating amounts. Paper is always priced by the roll.

One big question confronting the home decorator is whether a wall should be in a plain color or a pattern. A patterned wall contributes movement but may eventually tire the eye if the color and line contrasts are too strong.

You may prefer to use wall papers for areas of transient use, such as foyers, dining rooms, guest bedrooms, closets, bath and playrooms, closets, bathrooms and playrooms. Papers are thought less adaptable for living rooms and master bedrooms. Generally, patterned walls are more satisfactory with subdued or plain colored floor covering and draperies, which in turn should harmonize in color with the paper. Walls with many openings or breaks are not suited to a large pattern. If paper is desirable for a particular room, the subject or pattern should be in character with the use of the room, and if possible should help express the personality or interest of the owner. The scale of the pattern must be consistent with the size of the room and the height of the walls. Vertical lines accent height. Horizontal lines tend to lower height.

Do not store vegetables in prepackaged film containers for more than two or three days. Some of the films maintain a high moisture content and may increase mold growth on produce. It is better to remove the film covering and store in the humid vegetable tray of the refrigerator. The tray keeps down excessive shriveling, but doesn't cause as much mold growth as film bags.

For a delicious flavor use rendered chicken fat to make biscuits to serve with chicken dishes or on baked chicken pie. The fat also makes a tasty cream sauce served with vegetables or meat.

Add leftover sausage meat to plain pancake batter. Or combine it with leftover mashed potatoes, form into patties, and brown in a hot frying pan.

CREDIT RISK

How's your credit rating? R. K. Reynolds, assistant agricultural economist at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, says status as a credit risk is an important factor in farming today.

Farm size and production needed to provide adequate income have been expanding at an increasing rate, especially for the past 5 to 10 years. Higher farm cost and lower prices for farm products are speeding this development, and more farmers need more capital. The constant adjustments many farmers are having to make to stay in business require additional capital investments. Few can save from their earnings fast enough to finance necessary adjustments, so credit has become an increasingly important tool in the business of farming.

Several sources of both long-term and short-term credit are available in Virginia farming. No matter what source he uses, however, the farmer must convince the lender that he has a sound basis for credit and required security. He must also show his farming program and management ability will increase his income enough to pay interest and principal. He must be ready to answer many question, such as these.

Can you show the proposed loan will enable you to increase profits enough to meet principal and interest payments.

Do you adopt new and improved farm practices that will increase your farm earnings?

Do you pay bills promptly?

If you are not able to pay, do you promptly explain to your lender just what you can do?

Do you try to get most of your credit from one source?

Do you welcome suggestions from lender about business and finance?

Do you keep a reserve (cash and liquid assets) large enough to meet minor emergencies?

STATE HIGHWAY WEEK

Richmond-- The State Highway Commission, following up on action taken by Governor J. Lindsay Almond, Jr. has set aside May 21-27 as Highway Week in Virginia and called for statewide recognition and understanding of a construction program that has reached "record proportions."

The commission's resolution gave full endorsement to the Almond proclamation of April 19 and noted that the "need for such a program of construction, improvements and maintenance has not received the public attention it deserves and requires if citizen support of Department's goals is to be achieved and sustained.

The commissioners noted that the Highway Week observance in Virginia will coincide with National Highway Week being supported by act of Congress and Presidential proclamation.

"Highway Week will be held for the purpose of publicizing the highway building program of the Commonwealth and thereby advancing public awareness and understanding of this program and its objectives a program necessary to provide Virginia citizens and visitors the safest and best transportation available, "the resolution stated.

As of last week the Department had $135,255,587 in construction 268,192 of the work; $24,799,839 involved primary construction, urban construction totaled $6,689,750 and secondary $8,294,806.

The commission resolution urged personnel of the Department and all Virginia citizens to observe and recognize Highway Week and each appropriate proceedings and ceremonies."

Commissioner H. H. Harris, addressed the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce at its annual meeting Friday, said his agency would work with Virginia Road Builders Association and other industry groups, will undertake local tours of construction and proposed projects for the daily and weekly press and the radio and television media prior to and during Highway Week.
